Dr. Gregory Deacon’s received a PhD in 2011 at the School of Oriental and African Studies and is currently a British Academy Post-Doctoral Research Fellow at the African Studies Centre, University of Oxford. His current research project is entitled “The Complex Role of Varied Categories of Pentecostalism: Testing Accepted Wisdom Through the Lens of Civil Society and Elections in Kenya.” This research looks at what the churches did before, during and after the 2007 election and whether their current actions and teachings are encouraging government accountability and fostering a vibrant civil society of informed individuals. In particular this work assesses the potential of Pentecostal churches to produce a notably different process in the next elections in 2012.

He is re-working his doctoral thesis into a book with the working title “Survival and Mistrust: Pentecostalism in Kibera Slum.” His approach is inter-disciplinary, reflecting his varied interests and experience — including working as a civil servant, translator, business development consultant and investment fund manager.

His recent publications include 'Pentecostalism and development in Kibera informal settlement, Nairobi', Development in Practice, Vol. 2 Issue 5-6, 2012.
