Developmental Refugees: Rwandan Refugees, the Environment, and National Development in Ngara District, Tanzania

Jill Rosenthal
PhD Candidate, History Department, Emory University

Wednesday, November 13, 2013
12 - 1 p.m.
Anthropology 206

Light lunch provided

Jill Rosenthal is a PhD candidate in African history at Emory University. She is currently completing her dissertation, From ‘Migrants’ to ‘Refugees’: Humanitarian Aid, Development, and, Nationalism in Ngara District, Tanzania. Based on one year of archival and oral research made possible by an International Institute of Education/Fulbright Hays fellowship, Jill’s research explores histories of migration, humanitarian intervention, and identity politics in Ngara district. Her interest in humanitarian aid and its local effects stems from prior research on violence in Africa’s Great Lakes region, as well as work for Columbia University’s Earth Institute. Her interests include histories of global governance, violence, and border construction in twentieth-century sub-Saharan Africa.